"Relearning to Be Human for Global Times: Contemporary Tendencies of Studies in Philosophy of Religion." It seems modern Western civilization finds itself in a deep spiritual crisis. This has affected the development of traditional religious institutions especially in the Western countries. The inversion of this situation could be seen in various radical and even extremist religious trends in recent years as well as ultraconservative trends within traditional religions to fill in the void of people's worldview created by this crisis. These two trends are actually similar because both restrict the freedom of their believers and hence limit the personal contact with the Divine. Freedom and its growth are an integral part of a true religiosity, which helps promote, rather than destruct, the genuine personality of the human being. The development of this particular discipline is the continuation of its past. The event is coordinated by Ruzana Pskhu. For more information visit HERE.
